Machine learning is a branch of artificial intelligence that allows system to learn patterns from data without being explicitly programmed. It uses algorithms such as regression, classification and clustering to make prediction and improve performance overtime.